Miriam develops and edits a wide variety of printed materials and online content, including articles, webpage text, blog and social media posts, case studies, fact sheets, promotional materials, directories, guides, manuals, reports, books, proposals, and content for slide presentations. She has substantial experience in writing and editing technical, instructional, and educational materials. Miriam does thorough research and fact-checking. She is highly skilled at organizing and synthesizing information. And she conveys complex topics in clear and accessible language. She is also able to tailor a project's content and writing style to fit the intended audience, e.g., professionals or the general public. Miriam is highly detail-oriented, but she also works very efficiently and can complete most projects quickly.

How does proofreading differ from copyediting?

Proofreading involves identifying and fixing grammatical and typographical errors, whereas full-service copyediting includes a broader review of content, clarity, wording, consistency, and organization (in addition to fixing grammatical and typographical errors).
